He's hired by the Outreach Mining Company to investigate the mysterious disappearance of one of its mining crews on an uncolonized planet. And the deeper he digs, the more people want to see him dead...

Prsentation de l'diteurAs a Psychic Investigator, Jack Steins specialtyis drawing clues from dreams and psychic impressions. Its not a line of work that draws a lot of respect in The Locality, where the rich live high and dry, and the poor rot at the roots. His latest client is Outreach Industries, a mega-conglom thats reached out and grabbed every resource on every chunk of rock in the galaxyincluding the rim planet Dairil III, where a mining crew has mysteriously disappeared. Jacks been hired to sniff them out. In his dreams. One problem: Jacks visions are cluttered with strange mystical symbols and red herrings. Its enough to make him wonder if Outreach really wants the miners to be found. When Jack gets his hands on a seemingly minor piece of evidence, suddenly half the Locality is after him. And nobodys willing to tell him why. This could be part of something that's too big for even Jack to wrap his mind around. Booklist Psychic investigator Jack Stein makes a living off his dreams, for he receives information on his crime cases in them. If his isn't a respected profession, and he isn't really all that good at it, at least it pays the bills. Now Jack has been hired by resource-hungry, interplanetary conglomerate Outreach Industries to look into the disappearance of a team of miners on Dairil III, and things aren't going so well. His dreams are strangely littered with arcane symbols and undecipherable clues, and in no time at all, a pack of characters who are connected in interesting ways very much wants him out of the way, leading Jack to wonder whether Outreach really wants this case solved. Furthermore, a 12-year-old computer prodigy from the streets, who has adopted Jack as her caretaker, knows a whole lot more about the case than he does. A fun, fast-paced sf mystery. Paula Luedtke
